The National Weather Service has issued the following statement in regards to the weather conditions for our area in the next 24 hours, "There is a significant risk of severe thunderstorms this afternoon and evening, with the potential for very large hail and tornadoes. While the threat of severe weather will exist across the entire outlook area, it appears that the greatest threat for tornadoes will be along and south of the Interstate 88 corridor, including the Dixon, Rochelle, DeKalb, Peru, Pontiac, Morris and Kankakee. Individual thunderstorm movement will be rapidly to the northeast. The severe weather threat will end from west to east this evening "
